Dives Opis Natura ſuæ eſt.
Hor. Sat. Lib. 1.

THAT Foreſight and Care, which the Creator of all Things hath beſtowed on Nature, is ſtrange and wonderful; for how frequent do we ſee, what Power and Dexterity ſhe imparts to living Creatures, that have their Members merely defective! ſo that the other Members, which are whole and perfect, do divers Things beyond their ordinary Function. Inſomuch that one may ſay, that Perfection conſiſts not in a proper Diſtinction of our Limbs, but in the continual Application and Uſe of them.

I myſelf, being once at an old Gentleman's Houſe, an intimate Friend of mine, upon the Borders of Shropſhire, he entertain'd us with the greateſt Reſpect and Civility imaginable; but particularly, he ſent to a ſmall Village, hard by, for a Youth about 16 Years of Age, deſcended of a good Family, born without any Arms, who did with his Feet, ſeveral Things to a Wonder, what others can do with their Hands; ſo that he himſelf affirmed he was recompens'd with one Gift inſtead of another. Having ſeated himſelf on a Place equal to the Height of the Table, whereon the Meat ſtood, he began to cut Bread and Meat; and by ſtooping down his Head, he put the Meat in his Mouth, as eaſily as another could do with his Hands. After Dinner, he took Pen and Ink, and wrote ſeveral Sentences in Engliſh, ſo ſtrait and compleat, that all of us deſir'd to have ſome of them as a wonderful Performance. Whilſt he was thus doing, I mark'd diligently the Make of his Feet; they were long, fit to take hold of any Thing, and at a Diſtance one would take them for Fingers. Such a Sight as this was wonderfully ſtrange, and ſurprizing to me, to behold ſuch a miraculous Recompenſe of Nature.

There was at Nuremberg, as I have read in old Hiſtory, a young Man and Woman, born of one Father and Mother, of no obſcure Family, that were endued with a ſingular quick Conceit: For altho' they were deaf and dumb, yet could both of them read, write, cypher, and caſt Account to a Wonder. The young Man, by the firſt Signs that were made him, conceived what he was requir'd to do: If he had not his Pen and Ink by him, he could ſhow by his very Countenance, and Motions, what he would have done; and was the quickeſt at Cards and Dice, of any in the Family. His Siſter excel'd moſt for working, with the Needle, all Kind of Seamſtry, Tapeſtry, and Embroidery; in ſhort, all Manner of Needle-work: But above all what was moſt remarkable, was, that moſt commonly as ſoon as they ſaw one's Lips ſtir, they underſtood one's Meaning: They were often at Church, altho' almoſt every Body would think it unneceſſary; and yet a Body might ſay, they conceived with their Eyes the Words of the Miniſter, as others with their Ears; for they would often-times, (no Body teaching, or ſetting them any Copies) write out readily the Lord's Prayer, with many others. When, in the Sermons or Prayers, the Preacher mention'd the Name of Jeſus, the young Man was ready before any of the Hearers, to bow with all Reverence: So careful is Nature, like a good Mother, to make amends for a Fault, that none ſhould accuſe her for a Step-Mother!

We will conclude this Letter, with a Story of one that was born blind; in whom Nature made a Supply of that Defect, by a cunning Judgment, and other particular Gifts. The Tale is related by Antonius de Palermo, an old Writer, thus: I learn'd, (ſays he) of King Alphonſus, that there was a Sicilian born blind, living at that Time in the City Gergento, call'd formerly Agrigentum, who had follow'd him often-times a Hunting, and ſhew'd the Huntſmen the retreating Places of the wild Beaſts. He added further, touching the Induſtry of this blind Man, that he had by his Sparingneſs and Scraping got together about 600*l.* which put him to a great deal of Care. He reſolv'd, at laſt, to hide them in a Field: As he was making a Hole in the Ground to that Purpoſe, a Neighbour of his eſpied him, who, as ſoon as he was gone, ſearch'd in the Ground, found the Money, and carried it clean off. Three or four Days after, the blind Man returning to viſit his Caſh, and finding it gone, began to fret and rave, like one altogether forlorn: And after much thinking and debating within himſelf, concludes, that no Body but his Neighbour could have ſerv'd him ſuch a Trick. Whereupon finding him out, he thus accoſts him: Neighbour, I'm come to have your Opinion; I have 1200*l.* and the one Half of them I have hid in a ſafe Place, and for the other Half I know not what to do with them, having not my Sight, and being very unfit to keep any ſuch Thing; therefore what think you? might not I hide this other Half with the reſt in the ſame Place of Safety? His Neighbour approv'd and commended his Reſolution, and going ſpeedily to the Place, carried back again what he had took out before, hoping he ſhould have all the 1200*l.* together. The next Day the blind Man goes to his Hole, and finding there his Money again, took it out, and coming home, ſends for his Neighbour, ſaying to him with a chearful Voice; Neighbour, The blind Man has ſeen better than he that has two Eyes.

Sent by H. Rodney, to a Friend in the Country.

I.

FREE from the buſy Cares of State,
With no Ambition to be great,
I, with my Muſe, am gently laid
Beneath an Arbour's homely Shade.

II.

Whilſt you in Whitton's ſoft Retreat,
(The Muſes ever-lovely Seat!)
Serenely view each happy Day,
In Eaſe and Plenty glide away.

III.

Here Nature all Perfection yields,
Her beauteous Flowers and painted Fields;
Here Birds employ their tuneful Throats,
And ſweetly warble o'er their Notes.

IV.

Grant me but a contented Mind,
Not to Extravagance inclin'd,
To know when I've ſufficient Store,
Nor arrogantly aim at more!

V.

In Whitton's grateful Shades, I'd chuſe
A Piece of Ground to pleaſe my Muſe,
On which a little Houſe I'd raiſe,
To ſpend my laſt, my quiet, Days.

VI.

A little Plat of Garden too,
Where fragrant Flowers may ſweetly blow;
And a cool Riv'let purling round,
Shou'd teach the Compaſs of my Ground.

VII.

Here Ned and I would waſte the Time,
And quaff the heav'nly Punch and Wine;
Each Summer's Noon we'd take a Glaſs,
And ſeldom think of ought but Eaſe.

VIII.

If Providence by chance me ſpares,
And grants a longer Date of Years,
To ſearch Pope's Works, divinely writ,
And pleaſant Swift's immortal Wit.

IX.

If here my Friend, my Edward, dies,
I will obſerve his Obſequies!
A decent Fun'ral he ſhall have,
And one kind Tear ſhed o'er his Grave.

The following Obſervations upon News-Papers, being calculated to divert the Reader, we ſhall make no Apology for their finding Place in this Paper.

AS many of our News-Papers are charged with playing Tricks with the Publick, I ſhall make bold to mention a few of them; and they are chiefly theſe, Falſity, Abſurdity, and Trifling. We are frequently amuſed with the Lives and Actions of Perſons that were never born; and with the Deaths of thoſe that never liv'd; and large Eſtates deviſ'd by People that never enjoy'd them, nor indeed ever claim'd any Right to do.

An Author, in the Morning, gives us an Account of the Death of a Perſon of Note and Eminence, whoſe Condition hath entitled him to a Place in his Paper; he tells us the Place, Day, Hour, and the Minute he expir'd, with a long Detail of the Fortune and Merit he was poſſeſſed of. A Writer for the Evening enters his Caveat againſt ſome Particulars of the Fact, and declares his Brother hath had an ill Information; for that the Party did not depart at the Time mention'd in his Paper, and that himſelf only is in Poſſeſſion of the Truth; and avers, that it happen'd about half an Hour after that Time, and at a different Place than what the other has reported it. The next Day a Third ſtarts up, with a grievous Complaint of the Town's being impos'd upon, and triumphs in a more genuine and exact Account than either of them. He inſiſts upon it, that he did not fairly leave the World till 14 Minutes and 59 Seconds after the Time both the others have brought it down to; and moreover maintains, that the Demiſe in Diſpute happen'd at a Seat in the Country, and not an Houſe in the Town, as has been falſly publiſh'd in the other Papers.

They are now altogether by the Ears about ſettling of the Will, and diſpoſing of the Effects. After a great deal of Wrangling upon thoſe Heads, they begin to conſider that the Corpſe muſt have Chriſtian Burial; they turn their Thoughts to that Point, and begin to ſettle the Funeral. One Author is for its lying in State; another will not come into it, but declares for a private Interment. At laſt a Writer buries it in a moſt magnificent Manner, in a Church ſome Miles diſtant from London; and his Antagoniſt performs the Funeral at another Church fifty Miles farther than that, and in a more decent Way. Next a Paper gives us the Names of thoſe that ſupported the Pall, together with who was the chief Mourner. This is ſo provoking to him who could not lay hold on this Intelligence in Time, that he is reſolv'd to be even with his Rival; ſo that the next News we hear, are the Heads of the Sermon that was preach'd at the Funeral.

The Friends and Acquaintance of the Deceas'd, that may be remote from the Town, and have nothing elſe to govern them but theſe Advices, believe the Main of them; and notwithſtanding their Perplexities and Variation, all credit the Death of their old Friend, and begin to deſcant on the Actions of his Life, ſome conjecturing what he muſt have died worth, and what a Man he might have been, was it not for ſuch a Failing; and others, how long they had remembred and been acquainted with him, &c.

When the Story has gone this Length, and begins to be old, and almoſt obliterated, the News-Paper that was moſt forward in publiſhing it, to the Aſtoniſhment of all Mankind, cries out peccavi, and confeſſes how he was impoſed on; acknowledges his Sorrow and Contrition, and heartily begs Pardon of the Publick, and the Perſon, whom he now maintains to be alive, and in good Health; and ſays, that the Report of his Death, as publiſh'd in his, and OTHER PAPERS, is entirely falſe, groundleſs, and without any Manner of Foundation.

There have been Inſtances of Women who have been frighten'd into Miſcarriages, and ſome even to Death, at the unexpected Viſits of their Friends, (whom, upon the Credit of the Papers) they have verily believed to have been as really dead as their great Grandmothers were. A Lady of Quality, that is become ſuperannuated, is not to confine herſelf to Books of Devotion alone; People are not born for themſelves only; no, no, as antient as ſhe is, ſhe muſt yet do ſome Service to the Society. Says an Author, What, ſhall her Grace fancy herſelf as hail at Fourſcore as ſhe was at Forty? Accordingly, he lends her his Hand, and ſhe is led very dangerouſly ill into his Paper. The next Morning he is obliged to retract it, and ſo the Publick are Gainers two Paragraphs by it.

Nor ſhall a Lord Spiritual and Temporal, that has attain'd his Grand Climacterical Year, and yet remains in a good State of Mind and Body, lie idle, but muſt occaſionally be extremely ill, attended by ſundry Phyſicians, and given over; when a Dearth of Tales and Tidings ſhall cauſe a Chaſm in the Paper. The Perſons ſo mention'd, read theſe Relations themſelves, and oftentimes with much Pleaſure, becauſe they receive a real Benefit by them: For they divert the Spleen and Vapours, natural to old Age, and ſo prove a happy Means of preſerving them alive, much longer than ſome People perhaps may care for.

A noble Lord in a high Station, that is pretty far advanced in Years, never riſes from his Bed, but aſks, Am I in the Papers? For it has been an Obſervation made by moſt People, that his Name has been made uſe of for being greatly indiſpos'd; finely mended; dangerouſly relaps'd; in a fair Way of Recovery; going to, and returning from the Country; and being ſent for by Expreſſes to aſſiſt at Councils, that have not been held, and Boards that have not met, on Buſineſs of great Importance, conſtantly de Die in Diem, in one Paper or other, for ſeveral Years together.

A Man may better venture to take a Purſe from a Merchant upon Change, than a Judge to take an Airing in his Coach, without being taken into Cuſtody of a News-Writer for it. I have known them give ſuch minute Accounts of the Times of the Judges ſetting out for this Place and from that Place in their private Capacities, that ſome of them have actually ſuſpended their Journeys, to prevent Highwaymens taking the Hint, and lying in Ambuſh for them on the Roads.

I am told of a certain Great Man who hath been moſt groſly affronted and vilify'd by certain Papers from Week to Week, Month to Month, and from Year to Year, for a very long Series of Time; and who hath publickly declar'd, that nothing ſhall provoke him to depart from a Maxim which he has long laid down, viz. That 'tis better one Man be perpetually abus'd, than Thouſands periſh.

About Michaelmas, an Author has told us in Print, he was aſſured that Chriſtmas-Day would be on the 25th of December following. If the Man has not been ſtarv'd before the Time, but ſurviv'd to St. Stephen's Day, and ſeen his wonderful Prediction happen and come to paſs; 'tis pleaſant to obſerve, how he glories and exults in his next Paper, telling us, It is agreeable to what was formerly publiſh'd in his, and in no other Paper; and ſets a high Value on his Judgment for anticipating his Brethren, the other Writers, who look like Fools at one another, to ſee themſelves thus jockey'd out of ſo remarkable a Piece of Intelligence.

One Day we are told of a Reform of the Army, and the next of a Promotion of General Officers. 'Tis merry enough to ſee a Colonel of a Regiment in a Coffee-houſe, reading a News-Paper, that informs him of a Gentleman being made Lieutenant-Colonel to a Company of Foot; and of a General of Horſe being promoted to the Rank of Captain-Lieutenant in his own Regiment; of which the Papers extant have afforded us numberleſs Inſtances. We often read of ſome Duke, who is called eldeſt Son and Heir apparent to a Viſcount or Baron, going to, or returning from his Travels.

A dignify'd Clergyman, who had given a few Sacks of Coals amongſt ſome poor People in hard Weather, happen'd to come into Brown's Coffee-houſe in Spring-Garden, where ſome of the Gentlemen cry'd out, Doctor, you're in the Papers. The Gentleman ſeem'd to be greatly ſurprized at the Thing: What impudent Raſcal has made free with my Character? anſwers the Prieſt. Upon which one, with an audible Voice, read out the Paragraph, which contained nothing more than a fine Encomium on his Charity. The Doctor ſaid, indeed there was ſome Truth in it; but then, how impertinent it was in any Fellow to make ſuch a trifling Affair the Burden of his Paper. This gave Occaſion for various Reflections on the Papers in general. The Printer happen'd to be preſent, and heard himſelf, and others of his Fraternity, abuſed in this Manner for ſome Time. Several Gentlemen that were his Acquaintance, thought it far better to be ſilent, than to interfere in his Favour, becauſe that might tend to expoſe him to the Doctor's farther Clamour and Reſentment. After the Divine had harangued the Company with a long Diſcourſe upon the Inſolence of Authors, Printers, and Publiſhers; the Printer pull'd out of his Pocket the Copy from which this injurious Article had been printed, and which appear'd, to the entire Satisfaction of every one preſent, to be the Doctor's own Hand-Writing. The Printer further declar'd, that he knew no more of the Matter, than that his Servants, in his Abſence, receiv'd the uſual Price of three Shillings and Six-pence, for its being inſerted in his Paper.

TUESDAY, November 21.

We have an Account from Hereford, that (notwithſtanding the late Act of Parliament of the 5th of his preſent Majeſty, made for the Puniſhment of thoſe who ſhall wilfully and malicioufly pull down and deſtroy Turnpikes for repairing the Highways) great Numbers of riotous and rebellious Perſons, armed with Fire-Arms and other dangerous Weapons, have, in Contempt and Defiance of the Laws, frequently aſſembled themſelves together in the Night time, and marched in formidable Bodies into that City, and pulled down and deſtroyed the Turnpikes erected on the Roads leading thereto, and the Houſes of the ſaid Turnpike Keepers, and ſome Part of other Dwelling Houſes adjacent to the ſaid Turnpikes; after they had plundered the ſame, and fired their Guns into the Windows of ſeveral other Dwelling Houſes and in the publick Streets of the ſaid City, threatned and declared that they would not only deſtroy the Turnpikes, but would murder the Keepers thereof, and all ſuch Truſtees who ſhould preſume to act under the Authority of the Act of Parliament; and at the publick Market Place, and in the Streets of the ſaid City, have given Notice, in a moſt audacious Manner, that if the Magiſtrates, or any other Perſons, ſhould interrupt or oppoſe them, they would ſet the ſaid City on Fire. 'Tis further added, that theſe wicked and rebellious Practices were too much uſed in thoſe Parts before the paſſing of the ſaid Act of the 5th of his preſent Majeſty, but that they have been continued more frequently, with more Violence, and with greater Terror to the Inhabitants there, ſince the paſſing of the ſaid Act, than they were before, and therefore 'tis ſuppoſed that ſome ſpeedy Method will be taken to ſuppreſs them.

FRIDAY, November 24.

On Wednesday last a Gentleman of Kensington-Square received an Anonymous Letter by the Penny-Post, demanding ten Guineas to be left tied up in a Paper at the North Corner of the said Square, under a large Stone that he should find there for that Purpose, and if the Terms were not complied with, they would murder him, or set his House on Fire the next Night.

Yesterday the Stewards and the rest of the Gentlemen of the Oxfordshire Feast, met at Leatherseller's-Hall, from whence they went in Procession with Kettle-Drums, Trumpets, and other Musick before them to Bow-Church in Cheapside, where they heard an excellent Sermon suitable to the Occasion, preach'd by the Rev. Last Wednesday Evening was opened the Passage from the lower Leadenhall-Market into the new one, to the no small Joy of the Inhabitants.

They write from Canterbury, that on Saturday last one Philip Giles, upwards of 70 Years of Age, blind of the left Eye, and an Inhabitant of Southwark, and George Baker, aged about 40, also blind of his left Eye, were apprehended, taken, and committed to his Majesty's Goal for the Eastern Parts of the County of Kent, in St. Dunstan's, near this City, charged upon Oath with playing at Cups and Balls, and betting and laying Wagers, with Intent to defraud and cheat People of their Money; there were four more in their Company, armed with Pistols, who made their Escapes. A great many People of this County have lately been cheated by this very Company, some of whom have lost great Sums of Money.

This Day their Majesties, and the rest of the Royal-Family, came from Richmond to St. James's, and continues there for the Winter-Season.

FOREIGN NEWS.

Hague, Oct. 7. N. S.

ACcording to our last Advices from Seville, the new Dey of Algiers seems resolved to carry on the War against the Spaniards with Vigour, and even to drive them (if possible) out of their new Conquests: With this View, he has assembled an Army of 40,000 Men, and sent them into the Neighbourhood of Oran, to keep the Garrisons of that Town and Mazalquivir continually under Arms, and to hinder their receiving and Provisions or Refreshments from the adjacent Country. A Reinforcement of 20 or 30,000 Men is gathering together, in order to join that Army, which has already stormed Fort St. Philip, and killed the Spaniards 4000 Men: Four or five such Blows would go near to demolish the whole Garrison.

The Success of the Spanish Army before Oran, was in a great Measure owing to the Avarice of the Bashaw or Bey Bigotiglio, who having scraped together immense Riches in his Government of that Place since the Year 1708, resolved to secure them in the best Manner he could; and judging that they would run less Risque in the Mountains than shut up in a Place that was besieged, he sent them away accordingly, and having then nothing attractive in the Town, he even followed his Treasure, and left Oran to shift for itself.

Some Letters mention, that the old Dey of Algiers was ready to follow Bigitoglio's Example: But whether that be true or false, the new Dey appears to be a stirring Man, and has actually fitted out some of the largest Corsairs to go and cruize off of Oran, and hinder the Spaniards from throwing Provisions or Reinforcements into the Place, without a Squadron of seven or eight Men of War.

This Situation of the Garrison of Oran furnishes Spain with a specious Pretence for making what Armaments she pleases; and as she may afterwards turn them which Way hes Interest, or that of the Infant Don Carlos, calls, we should not be much surprized to hear they are designed for Italy, the Spaniards being tired with the dilatory Proceedings of the Court of Vienna, which is never at a Loss for some Excuse or other, whereby to elude the Demands so strenuously insisted upon in favour of Don Carlos, by Virtue of, and conformably to, the Treaties of London, Seville, and Vienna.

Some Letters from Italy continue to mention the Dislike which the Tuscans seem to cherish to their new Guests. They say that at Legborn, and other Places garrisoned by the Spaniards, there are frequent Quarrels and Disorders, enough to shew that those Foreigners have not yet conciliated the Good-Will either of the Nobility, Gentry, or Soldiery of the Great Duchy of Tuscany.

For the Benefit of all Master-Builders, Journeymen, Apprentices, &c.

SAMUEL HARDING, at the Bible and Anchor on the Pavement in St. Martin's-Lane, proposes to sell (at the Price of Five Shillings each Book stitch'd in blue Paper) the remaining Copies of that beautiful and correct Edition, in FOLIO, of,

THE first Book of Andrea Palladio's five Orders of Architecture, faithfully translated and the Plates exactly copied from the first Italian Edition printed at Venice 1570. Reviled by that late ingenious Architect Colen Campbell, Esq. Author of Vitruvius Britannicus: To which are added, five curious Plates of Doors, Windows, and Chimney-Pieces, invented by Mr. Campbell.

As the Design of lowering this Edition to almost half the Value is purely to preserve the Right of Copy against the ---- Design of one B---- Cole, it is hoped that those who have been already Purchasers will upon that Account excuse what otherwise might be justly deem'd an unfair Practice. And those who desire to have this Part of Palladio's Works, need only compare this Edition with that---- Specimen lately publish'd by Cole, to be able to judge where they may lay out their Money to the best Advantage.

N. B. This Cole tells you in his Proposals, that you are to have 30 Plates, whereas in this Edition you have 36, besides the Title Page. The Neatness of the Plates (I dare say) will be as much preferable to his, as the Translation of this Book is to his Specimen, and the Price will be as low, altho' there are more Plates.

This Day is published,
